Prof. Dr. Maurizio Tosi

Curriculum Vitae

Professore ordinario dal 1981, Maurizio Tosi ha coperto fino al 1994 la cattedra di Preistoria e Protostoria dell'Asia presso l'I.U.O. di Napoli e dal 1994 ad oggi la cattedra di Paletnologia presso l'Università di Bologna, Facoltà di Conservazione dei Beni Culturali. La sua principale specialità sono i processi formativi delle società complesse e lo sviluppo della ricerca archeologica per la definizione di tali processsi. Dal 1967 ha diretto progetti di ricerca sul campo per l'IsIAO spesso in collaborazione con numerosi Istituti Europei ed Americani in Iran, Oman, Pakistan, Turkmenistan, Yemen e nelle regioni asiatiche della Federazione Russa. Dal 1985 ad oggi M.T. è co-direttore di un programma di ricerca internazionale mirato allo studio dell'origine della navigazione e del commercio di lunga distanza nell'Oceano Indiano. Studioso di paleoeconomia e dell'organizzazione sociale dei popoli asiatici nella preistoria, M.T. ha indirizzato dal 1985 gran parte delle sue attività allo studio del rapporto tra popolazione e risorse nella ricostruzione sistematica dei paesaggi antichi.

Professor Robert H. Dyson, Jr

Robert H. Dyson, Jr. received his PhD from Harvard University in 1966. He directed the Hasanlu Project from 1956 to 1977. Before working in northwestern Iran, he participated in research projects in Africa and at Jericho, Nippur, Susa and Bahrain Island, as well as in the United States. He served as Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences at the University of Pennsylvania from 1979 to 1982. From 1982 to 1994, he was the Director of the University of Pennsylvania Museum. He was president of the Archaeological Institute of America and he is a member of the American Philosophical Society. Dr. Dyson has written numerous articles on ancient Iran, especially the sites of Hasanlu Tepe and Tepe Hissar.

A Digger Bows Out With A Fanfare Archaeologist Robert Dyson Is Retiring As Head Of The University Museum.

By Leonard W. Boasberg, INQUIRER STAFF WRITER

Posted: May 12, 1994

Robert Dyson, archaeologist who is stepping down after 12 years as director of the University Museum, is an Indiana Jones fan.

"I love them," he says of the adventure-packed films. But an archaeologist's life, he quickly adds, "is a lot tamer than that normally."

It can have its hairy moments, though.

Such as the moment that he found himself looking down the wrong end of a gun barrel.

It happened in 1958, during the second of his 21 digs in Hasanlu, in northwest Iran.

He and T. Cuyler Young Jr., a member of the team of archaeologists from the University Museum of Archaeology and Anthropology, had gone to pick up a truck in a town about 60 miles away. Returning at night, they ran into a roadblock. A band of sinister-looking men, pointing rifles at them, ordered them to get out.

"The roads were very unsafe in those days," Dyson recalled Friday in his office, and "we didn't know who these guys were."

Those guys turned out to be gendarmes, who arrested the two archaeologists and took them to the gendarme post nearby. There they interrogated them as to why they were traveling without papers and locked them up for the night.

What had happened, Dyson later learned, was that the Iranian government, nervous over the overthrow of King Faisal in neighboring Iraq, had suddenly imposed travel controls, of which, of course, he and his colleague knew nothing.

Then there was the time, a few years later in Guatemala, when he awoke at 3 in the morning to find about a dozen huge scorpions crawling on the floor next to him. What did he do?

"I stayed very carefully in my bed," he said slowly.

Dyson's most exciting moment occurred the same year as the roadblock episode.

It was his discovery at Hasanlu, a site largely unoccupied since the Urartians destroyed it in about 800 B.C., of the remains of an Iron Age warrior who was still clutching the now-famous golden bowl of Hasanlu. The find was a startling revelation of the existence of a rich and sophisticated culture, hitherto unknown.

But perhaps the most moving moment in Dyson's 44-year career as an archaeologist occurred May 4 at the annual black-tie dinner of the board of overseers of the University Museum of the University of Pennsylvania.

For more than a year, unbeknown to Dyson, overseers and museum staff members had been planning the evening as a tribute to Dyson and the "12 Challenging Years" in which he had served as museum director.

At the dinner, in the museum's Lower Egyptian Gallery, a 12-minute video featuring highlights of his career was shown. Mary Virginia Harris, a friend and colleague of Dyson's for more than 30 years, presented him with a book she had organized; it contained more than 100 letters of admiration and appreciation from friends, colleagues and scholars around the world.

And A. Bruce Mainwaring, chairman of the board of overseers and toastmaster of the evening, announced the endowment of a $1.25 million Robert H. Dyson chair in Near Eastern archaeology at the museum.

"That's something I've always dreamed about," Dyson, a slim 6-footer with chiseled features and an engaging smile, said two days later as he escorted a visitor around the museum to which he has devoted so much of his life. "It's very exciting because it's so important to the museum in order to stabilize our finances."

Finances are one of the challenges that Dyson had to meet when he took over as museum director in 1982.

The place was leaking financially and the roof was leaking, Mainwaring recalled at the dinner.

So practically the first challenge Dyson had to meet was to raise the money, $3.4 million, to put a new roof on the historically certified building, which opened in 1899 at 33d and Spruce Streets.

Other challenges he successfully met included modernizing the building to put it in conformity with the city's building code; installing alarm systems and security devices; renovating, and opening up storage areas. He restructured the administrative staff. He rejuvenated the museum's educational programs and its corps of volunteers - the guides who show visitors the museum's holdings from every inhabited continent in the world and the "mummy- dusters" who work in the storage areas and help in conservation. He computerized the museum's vast collection and records.

And he reinvigorated the museum's exhibit program, attracting thousands to shows on Egyptian mummies, Alaskan natives, the ancient Mayan people of Tikal, Guatemala, and the ancient peoples of China, among the many. He also launched a traveling-exhibitions program - hundreds of artifacts from the museum's ancient Nubian collection are being shown in the Bowers Museum of Cultural Art in Santa Ana, Calif.

In the last dozen years, the museum's endowment has gone from $3 million to more than $13 million. For Penn's $1 billion capital campaign, the museum set a goal of $18 million, reached it more than a year ago, raised its goal to $22 million and exceeded that.

It is, though, not as an administrator and fund-raiser but an archaeologist that Dyson is known worldwide.

"He has inspired and trained a generation of new leaders," Claire Fagin, interim president of the University of Pennsylvania, said at the dinner.

Indeed, at one time the directors of three major archaeological institutions in North America were former students of his: William A. Sumner of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, C.C. Lamberg-Karlovsky of the Peabody Museum at Harvard, and Young, his former colleague who later became director of the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto.

Sumner, who flew in from Chicago to attend the dinner, said, "The thing about Bob which always impressed me is that he could seem remote, but every time we reached some critical point he would step in and solve the problem."

The problem could be anything from identifying unfired mud-brick walls that dated from 6000 B.C. to shaking loose from the Iranian Ministry of Culture a permit to dig.

Dyson, an only child born in York, Pa., was only 13 when he made up his mind to become an archaeologist. He made a list of all the things he was interested in - botany, zoology, geology, paleontology, archaeology, history and geography - and "I decided archaeology was the obvious area because it would allow me to do all these other things."

When he was 4, his father, an air- conditioning engineer, moved the family to New York, where the young Dyson learned to take the subway to the American Museum of Natural History. In 1940, the family moved to Toronto, where Dyson would spend hours at the Royal Ontario Museum.

After a stint in the Navy, Dyson graduated magna cum laude from Harvard in 1950. He taught there for four years and, in 1954, came to the University of Pennsylvania as a field archaeologist. He obtained his doctorate from Harvard in 1966. While teaching at Penn, he also served as curator of the Near East Section of the University Museum.

Penn named him dean of its Faculty of Arts and Sciences in 1979 and, three years later, director of the museum.

In addition to Hasanlu, Hissar, Susa and Malyan in Iran and Tikal in Guatemala, Dyson, a bachelor, has gone digging in such far-flung places as Jericho; Nippur in southern Iraq; Bahrain in the Persian Gulf, and Gordion in Turkey. As a graduate student, he spent three months as a cultural anthropologist in the Kalahari Desert in Namibia.

Stepping down as director means that Dyson at last will have time to do some of the things he has been wanting to do for years, including learning more about computers and writing up the research work he did in his 21 expeditions to Hasanlu.

In archaeological digs, people are working in close quarters, often in remote areas, getting fried by the sun during the day and having nothing to do at night, and sometimes they get edgy. Hence "turtle days," which Dyson innovated at Hasanlu. The idea was that if you knew you were having a down day you would announce it, and everybody was supposed to leave you alone.

"Turtle days" became a tradition at Dyson digs, and they're still observed at the museum. Does Dyson ever have them himself? Not often, but when he does, "I just clam up and go to work."

Lauriston Ward

Lauriston Ward received his BA from Harvard College in 1903 and his AM from Harvard University in 1934. Ward was Curator of Asiatic Archaeology at Harvard from 1937-1960 and served as President and Founder of the Council for World Archaeology from 1953-1960 and Chairman of the American School of Prehistoric Research from 1954-1960.

Ward was very involved in archaeology, not as a dirt archaeologist per se, but as a creative organizing force. His main interests focused on establishing the major outlines in prehistoric Asiatic archaeology and linking the archaeology of several sub-areas of Asia
